

60+ CHARMING PHOTOS | 40 SMART DESIGN TIPS & PLANS

LOG HOME LIVING®

HOME on the RANCH

Single-Level Living
Is Making a BIG Comeback

DESIGN DIVERSITY:

4 distinctly different log homes

33 pages
of ideas!

Win the Trip
of a LIFETIME
p. 87

A Modern Twist on the Traditional Log Cabin

Old meets new in this reclaimed
log & timber masterpiece
p. 80

A porch balustrade, woven with mountain laurel under a heavy timber gabled pediment supported by 6-by-6-inch posts on stone pylons, invites visitors through the handmade doors of Evan and Gayle Peterson's log home in the mountains of western North Carolina. The 3,250-square-foot custom home's 8-by-10-inch dovetailed D-logs are finished with Perma-Chink's Ultra2 835 in Sequoia.

The Cure for Cabin Fever

A rustic log cabin interior with a high wooden ceiling, a leather sofa, a chandelier, and a staircase. The room features a large brown leather sofa with patterned cushions, a wooden coffee table, and a multi-tiered black metal side table. A wooden staircase with a light-colored railing leads to a second level. The ceiling is made of dark wood with exposed beams and a large black ceiling fan. A chandelier with multiple lit candles hangs from the ceiling. The walls are a mix of wood and light gray drywall. A red patterned rug is on the floor, and a doorway in the background shows a bedroom with a bed and a patterned blanket.

To complement the log interior, the Petersons chose drywall painted with a custom-mixed light gray shade for all non-wood wall surfaces throughout the house. To capture a rustic feel, the couple requested that the staircase posts and trusses remain rough with only a light sanding applied.

A North Carolina mountain log retreat is the perfect remedy to relieve long distance relationships and foster family togetherness.

story by Claudia Johnson | photography by Joseph Hilliard

ABOVE: The Petersons savor the luscious Blue Ridge landscape from the rear of their house, which was designed for relaxation on three levels: A 210-square-foot upper deck spanning the main floor, a lower deck off the stucco-finished basement and gravel patio with a fire pit.

OPPOSITE: Capturing mountain vistas and flooding the great room with light, windows stretch from the vaulted ceiling to the hardwood floors. Flanked by the master bedroom suite and the kitchen and dining area, the great room offers access to a wide, open loft.

There are two kinds of cabin fever. Gayle and Evan Peterson had the good kind — the kind that whispers a memory and teases of the future. A fever that starts low-grade, intensifying to the point that owning a log cabin is the only cure.

“Growing up, my family spent summers in a log cabin on a lake in New Jersey,” Evan recalls. “There were many fond memories of our summers in the cabin. Three boys sleeping in one bedroom can be entertaining, if not restful.”

After they were married, Gayle and Evan, who had been sweethearts through high school and college, were drawn to waterfront weekend escapes with their own boys, boating and swimming in the lake just as Evan had as a child. Some 40 years later, as the couple contemplated

Gayle's choice of simple, gray-painted custom cabinets creates a striking contrast to the natural log walls and wood ceiling. Additional storage is provided by a separate walk-in pantry. The center island seats six and has ample room for food prep on the 1/4-inch rolled steel countertop that matches the stove hood.

IN OUR HOME
LET LOVE ABIDE AND BLESS
ALL THOSE WHO STEP INSIDE.

TOP LEFT: Evan's loft office was designed for maximum use of a small space. A baseboard window adds light and peeks through the front porch gable, while low bookshelves take advantage of the room's knee walls.

LEFT: A custom metal piece by Chip Gerber of Steel Forest Furniture, this table is positioned comfortably before a great room fireplace of cultured stone and warmed by a gas insert. Patio doors open onto a screened porch.

A large wooden deck with outdoor furniture and a log cabin wall. The deck is made of light-colored wood and features a wooden railing. On the deck, there is a set of outdoor furniture including a wicker chair with a patterned backrest, a matching ottoman, and a small round table with a potted plant. The log cabin wall is made of thick, stacked logs and has several large windows with white frames. A black outdoor lamp is mounted on the wall. The background shows a dense forest of tall trees under a clear blue sky.

Spanning the main floor's mountain-facing side is a 210-square-foot open deck that becomes a covered porch on one end and a screened-in sitting room off the other. Darlene Dawson, owner of Bear's Den Log Homes who sold the Petersons their home package and consulted with them throughout construction, says she recommends Andersen 400 double-awning windows, which create an unobstructed view while providing both ventilation and protection from rain when open.

retirement, cabin fever began to rage.

"Gayle had a magazine about log homes and suggested that 'having one might be different and cool,'" Evan says. "In an instant the memories of the lake house came rushing back! It was a great idea, but we knew nothing about building a log home."

During their lives together, they had built four custom homes and were living in the last one in Texas with a second home in Florida. However, both homes were too far from their two sons who were now grown with families of their own. "After a great deal of research, we flew to North Carolina to look at property and met a couple who would become our guides and confidants for the next three years," explains Evan, referring to Honest Abe Log Homes independent dealers Darlene and Rodger Dawson, owners of Bear's Den Log Homes.

That weekend they bought land at Grandview Peaks near Nebo, North Carolina, almost 1,400 miles from their home.

"Soon Gayle and Darlene started designing the cabin," Evan says, laughing at the word "cabin" and remembering that over the two years spent developing a final plan, the house grew, then shrunk, then grew again.

Manufactured by Honest Abe Log Homes in Moss, Tennessee, the resulting 3,250-square-foot "cabin" is a custom designed, three-bedroom D-log home with a heart-stopping view from any of its 18 windows that face the Blue Ridge Mountains.

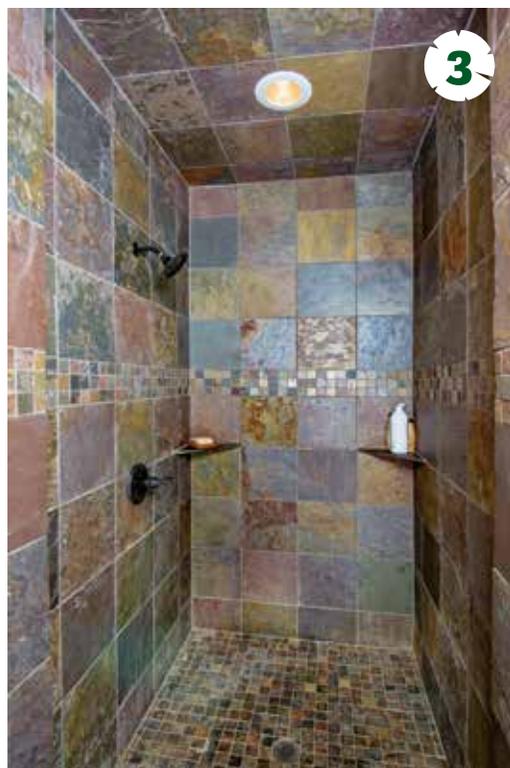

1

Perched on a mountain slope, the gravel patio is enhanced by a central stone fire pit and stabilized with a pressure treated retaining wall. Metal furniture was designed and crafted by Gayle's brother, Chip Gerber of Steel Forest Furniture.

2

3

1: The master suite includes a full bathroom and a walk-in closet separated by a handmade, space-saving sliding door. Honest Abe dealer Darlene Dawson advises using windows positioned near the ceiling in bedrooms to allow for flexible furniture placement.

2 & 3: The master bathroom's gray cabinets are topped by an accenting granite countertop with twin sinks. The 12-inch-square multicolored slate floor tiles carry through to the walk-in shower's walls.

"We sit on our deck in the morning, have our coffee and watch the sunrise," Gayle says. "In the evenings, we sit around our fire pit with a glass of wine (or two) and enjoy how relaxing and quiet it is in the mountains."

Evan and Gayle agree that the cabin has become far more than a retirement home. With their boat moored nearby, they re-create for their grandchildren some of the memories that stoked their fervor — and fever — for a cabin.

"It's a beautiful retreat," Gayle says with a sigh. "The cabin has become so much of what we do and who we are. Every day is a vacation in a wonderful place. And living in nature is good for the heart and soul." L

HOMEDetails

Square Footage: 3,250

Bedrooms: 3

Bathrooms: 2 full, 1 half

Log Provider:

Honest Abe Log Homes/
Bear's Den Log Homes

Builder:

Carolina Builders Services, Inc.

